History of Road Cycling

The first recorded cycling competition was a road race held in Paris in 1868. The three different disciplines (road, track and mountain bike) held today have evolved mainly because of technological developments relating to bicycles.

The world's first bike race for women is said to have taken place in the Sydney suburb of Ashfield in 1888. The introduction of professional races, such as the world-famous Tour de France, have established the widespread appeal of competitive road cycling around the world.

A ban on road racing in England in the early 1900s led to the development of the time trial, which is a race against the clock over a particular distance. This event became the second race on the Olympic road program at Atlanta in 1996. Riders start individually with a 90-second interval between each participant.

In 1993, cycling's governing body, the International Cycling Union, introduced a unified licence for professional and amateur road cyclists. The licence ended the segregation between amateurs and professionals, allowing them to compete against each other in all major events. This led to professional cyclists competing at the Olympic Games for the first time at Atlanta in 1996.

Road cycling today

Road racing is dominated by European countries and involves hundreds of fully professional teams at the elite level. Modern competition bikes are designed to be extremely lightweight and aerodynamic, to assist the rider in being as efficient as possible across the ground.

Road cycling at the Olympic Games

A road cycling race was part of the inaugural Modern Olympic Games program in Athens in 1896. It next appeared on the Olympic program in Stockholm 1912 when an individual road race and team road race were included. These two events have been included in every subsequent Olympic Games.

A women's road race was first included on the Olympic program in 1984 at Los Angeles. It was the first women's cycling event to appear at the Olympic Games. In 1996, the road team time trial event at the Olympic Games was replaced by the individual time trial road race. This new Olympic race was also added to the women's road program.

Historique du cyclisme sur route

La première course de cyclisme dont nous ayons gardé trace s'est déroulée à Paris en 1868. Les trois disciplines actuelles doivent leur évolution principalement aux progrès technologiques qui ont révolutionné le vélo.

La première course féminine au monde aurait pris place en 1888 à Ashfield, dans la banlieue de Sydney.

La création de courses professionnelles, telles que le célèbre Tour de France, consacre la popularité internationale de la compétition de cyclisme sur route.

Au début des années 1900, l'interdiction de la course sur route en Angleterre conduisit à la création de l'épreuve contre la montre, qui se déroule sur une distance donnée. Cette épreuve devint la seconde du programme olympique de course sur route d'Atlanta, en 1996. Les coureurs s'élancent un par un, à intervalles de quatre-vingt-dix secondes.

En 1993, l'organisme régissant le cyclisme, l'Union Internationale de Cyclisme, créa une licence unique pour les professionnels comme pour les amateurs de cyclisme sur route, mettant fin à la ségrégation entre ces deux catégories de coureurs, et leur permettant de concourir ensemble dans toutes les compétitions importantes. Ainsi, pour la première fois, les cyclistes professionnels ont-ils pu participer aux Jeux Olympiques à Atlanta, en 1996.

Le cyclisme sur route de nos jours

Le cyclisme sur route, dominé par les pays européens, voit s'affronter des centaines d'équipes professionnelles de haut niveau. Les vélos de compétition modernes, extrêmement légers et aérodynamiques, sont conçus pour permettre une efficacité maximale au coureur.

Road Race

The road race is a 17.1km lap of public roads, especially prepared for Olympic competition. The road race consists of a mass start with the first rider to complete the race being declared the winner. Men compete for 14 laps (239km) and women for 7 laps (120km). Start positions are allocated according to a country's top finisher at the previous year's World Championships. The higher seeded countries are placed at the front of the group. Where teams cannot be separated by seeding then a random draw is utilised.

Individual Time Trials

The time trial is a 15.6km lap following the same route as the road race minus the loop from Queens Park to Bronte Beach and back. In the individual time trials, competitors start at 90 second intervals and race against the clock -- the men for three laps (46.8km) and the women for two laps (31.2km). The cyclist with the fastest time is declared the winner.
